"During admission, they had a positive evolution and an adequate reaction to treatment, which allowed that after complying with the established protocol, a negative PCR was achieved; and although they are discharged from hospital, these patients must follow another fifteen days of surveillance in their homes, so that there is security in the non-transmissibility of the disease. "

The 33-year-old Javier Rodríguez Rubio, who works as a receptionist at the Hotel Santamaría, in the city of Camagüey, is one of the patients who received a medical discharge.

Now I have to continue taking care of myself at home.
